After a year's delay, the 2020 Tokyo Olympics are upon us, where the world's best athletes will compete against each other in 33 different sports. But if the live drama on the field isn't enough for you, there are plenty of Olympics movies about both real and fictional events that take place during the games. Here are ten of the best Olympics movies, spanning both the summer and winter games, a variety of sports, and a mix of genres, too. Race (2016) (Image credit: Focus) Jesse Owens was one of the seminal athletes of the 20th Century, winning four gold medals at the 1936 Olympics, so it's strange that it took 80 years to make a feature film about that accomplishment. Race doesn't quite capture the gold in telling Owens' story, but it does feature a winning performance from Stephan James as the track-and-field great. Jeremy Irons is predictably sly as Olympic team official Avery Brundage, and Jason Sudokis gets some pre-Ted Lasso coaching experience as Owens' college coach. The movie tries to capture the drama of Owens' triumph against the backdrop of Nazi Germany aiming to use the Olympics for propaganda purposes, and while that's not always successful, it's still a compelling watch. — Philip MichaelsRent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) Richard Jewell (2019) (Image credit: Warner Bros.) Jewell, a security guard at the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta, prevented a disaster when he spotted three pipe bombs and helped evacuate people from the area before they exploded. However, the FBI leaked that he was a person of interest, sparking unjustified scrutiny by the public. This Clint Eastwood-directed drama looks at the fallout and the toll it took on Jewell until he was exonerated nearly 90 days later, when Eric Rudolph confessed to planting the explosives. Starring Sam Rockwell, Kathy Bates, Olivia Wilde, and John Hamm. — Mike ProsperoRent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) | Stream: Cinemax Go (opens in new tab) | DirecTV (opens in new tab), Tonya (2017) (Image credit: Neon/30 West) Tonya Harding is one of the most infamous figures in all of sports, due to her ex-husband's attack on rival Nancy Kerrigan in 1994. I, Tonya tells Harding's side of the story with sympathy, nuance and dark humor. The mockumentary-style format follows her from the age of four, when the young Harding is forced into ice skating by her abusive mother LaVona (Allison Janney). The adult Harding (a transformed Margot Robbie) is clearly talented, but she trades in one stormy relationship for another with eventual husband Jeff Gulloly (Sebastian Stan). Everything about her life is a mess, except for skating, but even that becomes tainted by her poor decisions. What should've been her moment of glory — the 1994 Winter Olympics — becomes her ruin instead. — Kelly WooStream: Hulu (opens in new tab) | Showtime (opens in new tab) | Kanopy (opens in new tab) | DirecTV (opens in new tab) Miracle (2004) (Image credit: Disney) Do you believe in improbabilities? It's hard to make a movie that captures the actual drama of the U.S. men's hockey team defeating the Soviet Union in the 1980 Winter Olympics, but this one comes close. Kurt Russell as the sartorially challenged and temperamental head coach Herb Brooks is just about the only recognizable name, but then again, the U.S. team were a bunch of unknown college hockey players. Smartly, the movie adds in the real play-by-play commentary from Al Michaels as the game clock winds down and the most clichéd line in all of sports is said for the first time. — Mike ProsperoStream: Disney Plus (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) Chariots of Fire (1981) (Image credit: Enigma Productions) Even if you've never seen Chariots of Fire, you can probably hum its signature score without any prompting. The movie's soundtrack by Vangelis has been the background music for many a casual runner for the last four decades. But Chariots of Fire offers more than just a memorable title track, as its Best Picture Oscar indicates. The movie tells the real life story of two British runners — Eric Liddell (Ian Charleson) and Harold Abrahams (Ben Cross) — who are driven to compete in the 1924 Olympics for very different reasons. Chariots of Fire delivers a riveting story, some great performances and as we mentioned, its theme song is pretty hummable, too. — Philip MichaelsStream: Tubi (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) Eddie the Eagle (2016) (Image credit: 20th Century Fox) Michael Edwards had no business being an Olympic athlete, but due to a quirk in the rules, was able to qualify as Great Britain's sole representative in the ski jumping competition in the 1988 Calgary Olympics. Taron Edgerton stars as the eponymous Eddie alongside such heavyweights as Christopher Walken, Hugh Jackman, and Jim Broadbent. We're not spoiling anything by saying that Edwards never comes close to the podium — in fact, he finished dead last — but this easygoing movie is both heartwarming and inspiring. — Mike ProsperoStream: Disney Plus (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) Cool Runnings (1993) (Image credit: Disney) Another unlikely Olympic competitor at the 1988 Winter Olympics was the Jamaican bobsled team. This lighthearted Disney comedy stars John Candy as disgraced former U.S. bobsled Olympian Irv Blitzer, who reluctantly becomes the team's coach as they train in the tropical Caribbean before heading to snowy Canada for the games. It slides down the same tropes as many other underdog sports movies, but it's a sweet and funny movie regardless. — Mike ProsperoStream: Disney Plus (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) The Cutting Edge (1992) (Image credit: MGM) "Toe pick" may be the most unlikely romantic phrase ever, but it will produce a flutter in your heart after seeing The Cutting Edge. The comedy revolves around world-class pairs figure skater Kate (Moira Kelly), a spoiled prima donna who drives away all potential partners. In comes former hockey player Doug (D.B. Sweeney), who reluctantly agrees to skate with her for a chance at Olympic glory. As they train, they bicker and taunt one another — but also share explosive chemistry. Their feelings threaten to derail their partnership before the 1992 Albertville Olympics, but if they can trust each other to pull off a risky new maneuver, Kate and Doug can not only get that gold medal but something even better — true love. — Kelly WooStream: Hoopla (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) One Day in September (1999) (Image credit: Redbus) This documentary, narrated by Michael Douglas, recounts the 1972 Munich Olympics, where Palestinian terrorists took eleven Israeli athletes hostage, eventually killing all of them during a botched rescue attempt. In addition to interviews with German and Israeli figures who were present at the games, as well as Jamal Al-Gashey, the remaining surviving terrorist. While the film received the Academy Award for best documentary feature in 2000, its ending, which shows photos of the dead Israelis and Palestinians set to Deep Purple's "Child in Time," has been criticized for being gratuitously graphic. As follow-up viewing, Steven Spielberg's Munich (2005) is based on the story of the Israeli agents sent to kill the surviving terrorists. — Mike ProsperoStream: PlutoTV (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) Personal Best (1982) (Image credit: Warner Bros.) Mariel Hemingway stars as a track and field runner who develops a romantic relationship with a competitor (real-life Olympian Patrice Donnelly) as they try and make the U.S. team for the 1980 Summer Olympics in Moscow. The movie was received warmly by critics, but was a box office failure. The movie also features Scott Glenn as the coach, as well as numerous track and field athletes from the era, such as Frank Shorter, who won the gold medal for the marathon in the 1972 Olympics, and Evelyn Ashford, who has four gold medals and set the record for the 100-meter race. — Mike ProsperoStream: The Criterion Channel (opens in new tab) | Rent: Amazon (opens in new tab) | Apple (opens in new tab) Read next: The best streaming services Today's best Televisions deals (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) (opens in new tab) It isn't always possible to get a group of friends together in the same place, and if you like sharing your movie time with friends, that makes it lonely to watch alone. But you can host a watch party and watch movies with friends online. These services make it easy. Watch Parties and group watching features don't give non-service subscribers access to subscription content. Therefore, everyone who joins one of these watch parties will need to have their own subscription to whatever service you are using in order to participate. TeleParty (formerly Netflix Party) is the feature that started it all. Using Netflix in a browser, or on Chrome, Roku, or Apple TV, you can connect with up to 50 of your friends from anywhere Netflix is available. And now with TeleParty, you can do the same with most other currently available popular streaming services like HBO Max and Disney Plus. However, you and everyone who joins your party will have to install a Chrome or Edge extension to use TeleParty. Once it's installed, choose a movie, select TeleParty, tweak some features, and start sharing an invitation. Then, start watching your faves with your friends, and chat about it right from the screen you're using. To use Netflix Watch Party, find the content you want to share, click Watch Party, invite your friends and then you're good for chatting and watching together. Did you know that Disney+ has its own built-in stream sharing feature? GroupWatch is available for every single movie and show in the Disney+ library. Just select the GroupWatch icon on the details page of whatever you want to watch, then from the GroupWatch room select (+) Invite to get a shareable link. After that, copy and share the link with friends and family. You can only have a maximum of seven people sharing a given stream, and international sharing isn't allowed. Additionally, unlike most other watch parties, there's no option for text chat—participants are only able to select emoji reactions while watching. The GroupWatch feature is available for almost every single platform that currently supports Disney+ (from smart TVs to mobile devices). However it currently will not work on PlayStation 4 or on select Roku devices. Taking a clue from Netflix, Amazon Prime released its own version of watch party features—but Amazon Prime Video Watch Party allows you to connect with up to 100 of your friends, and you have access to all the movies and TV shows available through Amazon Prime. Unfortunately, you cannot stream rental or new release titles or premium channels, but there's plenty to choose from in Prime. To start an Amazon Prime Video Watch Party, find the video you want to watch with the Watch Party icon. Select the icon, invite friends, and start watching and chatting with your friends. Watch Party is available in most web browsers and Fire TVs. The Prime Video app for mobile devices supports Watch Party chat, so you can interact with other viewers on your phone while watching on another device. Hulu is one of the top streaming services available, and Hulu subscribers who pay for the Hulu (No Ads) plan or the Hulu (No Ads) + Live TV plan have access to this (apparently beta) feature of the streaming service. Users can host a Hulu Watch Party that allows them to choose from movies with the Watch Party icon. Up to 8 people can join a Hulu Watch Party, including multiple users on the same account, and playback is synced for all 8 people. There's also an option to chat as a group while the watch party is in progress. To host a Watch Party on Hulu, find a title with the Watch Party icon and select it, choose Start Watching, then invite your friends and you're all set. Facebook Watch isn't your typical Watch Party software or application. Instead, it's a feature on Facebook that lets you watch movies from Facebook that users have uploaded and from other sources. You can watch with friends, too, using the Watch Party feature of Facebook Watch. The service includes user-generated videos, it can be used on mobile devices, and it's Facebook-simple to use. However, users are limited in the content they can share with others, and they cannot watch content from outside services. Still, if there are Facebook videos you and your friends enjoy, this is a decent solution. To start a Facebook watch part, click in the What's on your mind text box as if you were writing a post. Then select the three-dots > Watch Party. Next, choose what you want to watch and share it with your friends. Scener is a Chrome browser extension that you can add to create and share watch parties with up to 50 of your friends. The service works with Netflix, HBO, Vimeo, Prime Video, Hulu, Funtimation, and Disney+. The crown jewel of the Scener product, however, is the ability to voice, video, and text chat alongside whatever movie or show you choose to watch. Nothing can replace a real theater, but Scener comes in a close second, which is probably why the company bills itself as the Virtual Movie Theater. To start using Scener, you have to install the extension and then select Create Private Theater. Select your options for services and what to watch, then add friends and start chatting. TwoSeven is a free watch party app that automatically syncs everyone's videos and has no participant limits. Any number of people can join, and many different services are supported—from YouTube to Netflix, and more. And if you want, you can connect a webcam to share video of your own live reactions while you all watch. There are some drawbacks, however. While TwoSeven's free tier does support a lot of services, you'll have to become a Patreon subscriber to use it with Hulu or Disney Plus. You'll also need to sign up with Patreon to use Screen Share. And unless you're using Screen Share, everyone in the watch party will need to have their own access to whatever you're watching. So if you want to watch something on Netflix, everybody needs to have their own Netflix subscription. If you're watching something on Disney Plus or Hulu, all participants will need to have a Patreon subscription to TwoSeven. You can share downloaded videos without these restrictions, so if you own any digital copies of a movie or TV show, there is a workaround to watching with friends. Once you create a TwoSeven account you can share the Watch Now URL with as many people as you want to get started. Metastream is a browser extension for Firefox and Chrome that allows you to set up watch parties for virtually any video with a URL. Once you get things set up, start a session and share your friend code to invite anyone. Text chat is supported, and if the linked videos use timestamps those are also included. What's more, you can set up a queue of multiple videos that will automatically play when each video finishes. Meaning you won't have to find something else to watch after the current show ends. Currently, Metastream is only available for Firefox and Chrome, so other web browsers won't work. Kast is a solid option in situations where not everybody has access to the same streaming services. A free account allows anyone to create or join a watch party to stream content from YouTube or Tubi, and supports up to 100 simultaneous watchers. But a premium account can also share anything in Kast's video library, or use Screen Share, with no watch restrictions placed on free accounts. The downside to this is watch parties hosted by free accounts will encounter ads, and what's available to share is somewhat limited. While premium accounts do have more sharing options, streaming services like Netflix and Disney Plus aren't directly supported. Plex Watch Together works for free Plex "Movies & TV" streaming and any videos you have saved on a Plex Media Server. In addition, watching content with friends and family online is free. Watch Together works with a lot of different platforms, too. Everything from Android and iOS to smart TVs and video game consoles are supported. And once you set up a lobby, all you have to do is wait for everyone to show up before you start, so there's no need to worry about syncing the video. Once playing, anyone participating can also control video playback. However, Plex Watch Together doesn't offer any chat options. And if you want to invite someone to join, you have to be friends with them first. So if you aren't already friends in the app, you'll need to jump through a few extra hoops before you can add them to the group. Once you're ready, find the video you want to share and select More, then choose Watch Together to open a lobby. After that, you just have to start inviting people to join.
